Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs)

Q1: What is the difference between an employment contract and an independent contractor agreement?

A1: The key difference lies in the degree of control exerted by the employer. Employment contracts signify an employer-employee relationship where the employer has significant control over how, when, and where the work is performed. Independent contractors, on the other hand, generally have more autonomy and are responsible for their own work methods and schedules. Q2: What are the common grounds for unfair dismissal?

A2: Unfair dismissal typically occurs when an employer terminates an employee's employment without a valid and fair reason, or without following proper procedures. Common grounds include discriminatory dismissal, dismissal for whistleblowing, or dismissal for exercising legal rights (e.g., taking sick leave). The specific grounds vary depending on the jurisdiction and the specifics of the employment contract.

Q5: What are the employer's responsibilities regarding workplace health and safety?

A5: Employers have a legal duty to provide a safe and healthy work environment for their employees. This includes risk assessments, providing appropriate safety equipment, training employees on safety procedures, and investigating accidents and near misses. Failure to fulfil these responsibilities can lead to severe penalties.

Q6: What is the role of a trade union in protecting employee rights?

A6: Trade unions represent employees' collective interests, negotiating for better wages, working conditions, and benefits. They can provide legal advice, support in grievance procedures, and representation in cases of unfair dismissal or other workplace disputes.

Q7: Can I be fired for taking sick leave?

A7: Generally, you cannot be fired solely for taking sick leave, provided you have a legitimate reason for your absence and comply with your employer's sick leave policies. However, employers may have grounds for dismissal if the absences are excessive or unsupported by medical evidence.
