He emphasized that while demons are real and actively seek to hinder God's work and attack believers, they are ultimately under the authority of Christ and can be resisted through the power of the Holy Spirit. This authority isn't earned but is a gift freely bestowed through faith and the new birth.

Hagin didn't believe in a simplistic, fear-mongering approach to demonic activity. He didn't focus solely on the negative aspects but actively empowered believers to take their rightful place as spiritual warriors.
