The Narrative of a Broken Identity: A Synopsis

"Houseboy" narrates the story of Toundi, a young Cameroonian boy who is taken from his village and raised as a servant in a Catholic mission. Through Toundi's perspective, Oyono unveils the insidious nature of colonial indoctrination. Toundi's internal conflict embodies the broader struggle of colonized individuals grappling with a fragmented sense of self. His unquestioning acceptance of the colonial hierarchy, his admiration for Father Gilbert, and his ultimate betrayal of his own people, all stem from this deep-seated indoctrination. This identity crisis, central to the novel's theme, exemplifies the psychological damage inflicted by colonial rule.

Betrayal: A Multifaceted Exploration

The theme of betrayal runs deep within "Houseboy." Toundi's betrayal isn't limited to his own people; it extends to himself and his inherent cultural heritage. He betrays his family, his community, and ultimately, his own authenticity. This multilayered betrayal highlights

The novel traces the progress of Joseph, a young boy from a agricultural village, as he ascends the ranks of the colonial hierarchy. Initially, he is filled with naive regard for the European world, accepting its values and aspiring to become a prosperous member of colonial society.
